Children and families in the International Protection Accommodation System

Key Messages:

The vulnerability of children by virtue of seeking international protection and the setting in which they reside with their families requires a supportive welfare response with multi-agency responsibility or requires a child protection response under Children First legislation (2015) and Guidance (2017).

Children and families in the International Protection Accommodation System

Key Messages:

Importance of voice of children &
young people in Direct Provision

Children and families in the International Protection Accommodation System

Key Messages:

Effective inter-agency and inter-professional cooperation between the Child and Family Agency and IPAS is essential to ensure the provision of timely and appropriate support to children.

Children and families in the International Protection Accommodation System

Key Messages:

Data analytics should be used to inform the design and provision of suitable services for children and families in international protection accommodation, and to monitor patterns and trends.

Children and families in the International Protection Accommodation System

Key Messages:

Tusla staff should be supported to ensure they have the requisite knowledge and skills to deliver services to children and families from diverse backgrounds living in international protection accommodation.

Challenges

- Consistent increase each month in the number of children and families seeking international protection and Ukraine displaced children and families requiring accommodation
- The increase in the number of families experiencing homelessness
- Challenge to effectively coordinate cross agency within existing resources to provide responsive public services and community supports

Opportunities:

- Joint CRA Tusla research project on identifying integrated family support approaches for families living in the International Protection Accommodation system.
- ESF+ funding to support the pathway for integrated child and family support for children and families in IPAS commencing 2023
- Community Response Fora model to coordinate and respond to families and the communities
- A needs-led approach in CYPSC to include new communities in forward planning
- Clear Pathways to Tusla Services (PPFS CPW TESS)
